Brief History

Construction of the Presbyterian Church, built of local Black Mountain stone, was commenced in the early 1870s and was dedicated and opened on 13 February, 1873. An extension to the church was opened on 27 October, 1901. Over the early decades of the 1900s its fortunes waxed and waned. As is happening today, the young people could see no future on the land and left for the major cities, reducing the pool of young Presbyterians who would have replaced the aging founding fathers. Services became infrequent and the church eventually closed the building in 1920. The land was taken over as part of a grazing lease. Initially, the building was used as a barn, but when the lease changed hands again, it was deserted.

In 1940, although in an appalling state of disrepair but structurally sound, its potential was recognised. A restoration fund was well subscribed and work was quickly completed. On 15 February, 1942, the church, now called St Ninian's was re-dedicated and re-opened for worship.

In 1961, with the rapid growth of Canberra, accommodation became a problem and services and Sunday School were held in the Lyneham Primary School while a church hall was being built.

In 1977, it became part of the Uniting Church in Australia and continues to flourish under its banner
